

CELEBRATING THE PROMISE OF DISCOVERY

With construction of the Williamson Translational Research Building under way, Dean Chip Souba hosted a special dinner in October to honor the Williamson family. The naming of the building recognizes Peter and Susan Williamson's landmark $20 million gift commitment in 2007, and their belief in the promise of scientific discovery to transform lives.

Members of the Dartmouth College Class of 1958—classmates of the late Dr. Peter Williamson—turned out in force for the event.

Mark Washburn

The Williamson Translational Research Building is under construction on the Dartmouth-Hitchcock Medical Center campus. The new building will bring basic scientists and physician-researchers together in close proximity to patient care.

Williamson family members (left to right) Doug (D'85, Med'93), Susan, and Debbie (D'81) are shown here with Dean Souba.

Guests included Dr. Barbara Jobst (right) shown here with Susan Williamson. A protégée and former colleague of Dr. Peter Williamson, Jobst is now a professor of neurology at Geisel and director of the Dartmouth Epilepsy Program.

Dr. Alan Green (left), chair and professor of psychiatry and associate dean for clinical and translational science at Geisel, chats with Dr. Milton Cooper (D'46, Med'45) at the event.

Photos by Jon Gilbert Fox, except where noted.